Hey everyone, I'm new to Python and struggling a bit with variables. What's the deal with declaring them?

Hi there! Variables in Python are dynamic, which means you don't need to specify their type explicitly. Just assign a value like this: `x = 10`, and Python figures out the type for you.

Outraged pink racoon

I've been wanting to set up an online course for a few months, but felt concerned about the time it would take me to build it from scratch in Ruby on Rails as a programmer by trade. However, I also was worried about using an off the shelf solution I couldn't control. I did a lot of research, and compared to Thinkific, LearnWorlds and Teachable I found TrainerCentral had a lot of benefits.
